What positive changes can you make?

Whether your venture is big or small, everyone should do the best they can.

We encourage everyone to take action. All it takes to make a start is the power of one, just as in the hummingbird story by Nobel Peace prize laureate Wangari Maathai, a campaigner for sustainable development, democracy and peace.

RSM believes the strength of individuals and businesses is multiplied when we join forces, and we can use that force to make positive changes. Need inspiration? Read the positive change stories from our students and alumni.

Symbolic contributions

We circle back to facts, options and solutions. Players will do a series of final games to try to find out how they can make improvements for responsible consumption and production to create a better future.

It’s time for the players to decide what the future will be. Can they make the right decisions for 2030?
There are many myths around MBA programmes. Over the years, business school has been viewed as a retreat for bankers and consultants; a breeding ground for business leaders driven by greed and senseless ambition; a one-stop-shop for landing the best job and earning the best salary imaginable.

But things are changing.

In recent years — and across the globe — we have noticed the growth of a new, conscientious generation of management students. They are focused on a variety of non-traditional career paths including sustainability, social impact, and entrepreneurship. Human factors rather than just perfect test scores, huge salaries and top jobs have become increasingly important. This generation is interested in gaining an education that not only benefits themselves, but also benefits and contributes to society. In short, they want to make a positive impact on the world they live and work in. Business School and the traditional MBA have to evolve. And we acknowledge that.

Which is why we offer you an MBA of real value.
SDG video series

RSM is committed to be a force for Positive Change in the world. So we are developing a series of learning modules, based on the United Nations’ 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) and their relevance for the business world. The videos published on these webpages are part of these learning modules. Tackling these pressing issues is not only needed to solve society’s most important challenges, but will also pave the way to new business and innovation perspectives within the boundaries of a healthy and prosperous society.

We invite you to explore the SDGs in the context of business, and discover your positive change.

RSM intends to incorporate these videos, complemented with assignments and teaching cases, as learning modules into its programmes. Would you like to know more about the production process of the learning modules? Read the blog ‘What should we do when we want to be a force for positive change in the world?’ by Eva Rood, director of the Positive Change Initiative.
