

Nenad Filipović

Dr. Filipović has been lecturer, MBA project director and director of executive education at IEDC-Bled School of Management since 1991. He graduated in electrical engineering from the University of Zagreb, Croatia, where he also received his Masters degree in computer science. He obtained his PhD in management from Free University of Amsterdam. He also completed the Stanford Executive Program at Graduate School of Business, Stanford University, as well as Harvard University's Central and East European Teachers Program.

Dr. Filipović started his professional career as assistant lecturer in computer science at the University of Zagreb. After three years, he joined the Končar Group, a large manufacturing company in Croatia. He was head of R&D in the Control Systems Division, director for worldwide sales of information technology, and senior group vice-president in charge of R&D and group restructuring.

Dr. Filipović teaches courses in general management and business ethics. He keeps close contact with business practices through his work as director of EMBA projects (in which capacity he supervised more than 200 consulting projects), as well as his advisory services to a number of international companies. He has been a personal mentor to more than 40 CEOs in Central Europe. He is the author and/or co-author of seven books and more than thirty case studies. Dr. Filipović has been a visiting faculty at a number of business schools in Europe and North America.