

Natalia Dmitrievskaia

Natalia Dmitrievskaia is Director of the Economics and Statistics Institute, Moscow State University of Economics, Statistics and Informatics (MESI).

She holds PhD in Economics from MESI, on the topic of Investment in Human Resources on the micro-economical level. Her research interests include MOOCs for: University Education, Human Capital Investments, Marketing Communications; International communications; Human Capital Investments; Competence-based educational program development for adult learners; Curriculum design and courses development with use of ICT; Knowledge management, and she has about 40 publications in related subject areas.

Formerly a Director of MESI Institute of Further Professional Education, Natalia has extensive experience in organizing and coordinating numerous educational business programs for specialists and unemployed people. She regularly participates in Russian and international research and educational projects as team leader, researcher and manager, e.g. RUSMECO project within the Sixth Framework Programme; projects at the request of Russian Ministry of Education and Science.

Natalia also teaches in MESI's MBA program, International Master of Science Programme "Human Resources Development" (joint program of MESI and University of Twente, the Netherlands), several e-learning programs, as well as courses for teaching staff of educational institutions.